KEEPING KIDS ALIVE

The Status of Child Death Review in The United States in 2010

Updated April 2011

Source of Information:
The National Center for Child Death Review State Profile Database:
Reports from State CDR Program Coordinators

Introduction

Each year almost 54,000 children, ages 0-18, die in the United States. Child Death Review programs exist in 49 states and the District of Columbia. The state of Idaho does not have a review program.

The goal of all the CDR programs is to understand how and why children die in order to take action to prevent other deaths. CDR leads to greater collaborative efforts and improvements in child health and safety.

Throughout the United States Child Death Review programs differ in the types of deaths reviewed, composition of state and local teams, level of state support and leadership, supporting legislation and reporting systems. Every state though has an agency and a person designated as that state's lead for the CDR program in the state. In February of 2010, The National Center for Child Death Review Policy and Practice polled these state leads to assess the current status of the state CDR programs. These following tables are a synopsis of the polling results, and represent the status of the programs in calendar 2010, with the following exceptions: Five states did not reply to the assessment, so that the data presented for those states is based on the most recent information available. These states include Colorado, Montana, and West Virginia.
